Commentary

UnitedHealth was the best performer, rising +13.14%. The company's Q2 results delivered a modest beat and indicated that medical cost trends factored in 2025 pricing, bolstering investor confidence. Tyler Technologies was second best, up +12.99%. The company announced excellent quarterly results, with +12% subscription growth and a small upgrade to its full year EPS guidance, driven by strong SaaS demand and expanding margins. Edwards Lifesciences was the worst performer, down -31.74%. The company announced a decent quarterly result, but downgraded its full year revenue growth expectations due to bottlenecks forming across some US hospitals, which are delaying certain aortic heart valve procedures. West Pharmaceutical Services was second worst, down -7.05%. The company announced weak quarterly results and downgraded its full year sales growth guidance due to customers continuing to manage down their safety stock levels built up during Covid.
